Christian beliefs about life after death

Although there are many different views about the nature of the afterlife, Christians believe that death is not the end and that the soul lives on. It is believed God on Judgement Day will decide who will be rewarded. There are different views about the nature of Heaven but most believe it is entered through beliefs in the teachings of Jesus. There are also different views about the nature of Hell although most Christians believe it is a separation from God. Beliefs about resurrection are often based on interpretations of John 11 and 1 Corinthians. Catholics believe the souls of good believers go straight to Heaven. Many believe there is a purgatory which is a place of cleansing before gaining entrance to Heaven.

How Christian funerals reflect beliefs about life after death

Many Christians consider it important to be buried as they believe on the Day of Judgement bones of the dead will reform for bodily resurrection. At Christian funerals prayers are said for the dying person so showing the importance of a relationship with God. Biblical passages which refer to resurrection through faith with Jesus are read at funerals e.g. John 11.25. Candles are often lit to reflect Jesus as the light of the world.

How Humanist funerals reflect beliefs about the afterlife

Humanists do not believe in a soul or in an afterlife. There are many different views amongst Humanists and funerals can be held in many places as they do not have a place of worship. Funerals will have readings and songs that were special to the deceased.
